...My mouseover shows that link leads to something called nakedclowncalendar.com.

I have not clicked it. I need to ask you a personal question first.

Are you a truly evil person? Or is this link - perhaps - somewhat less dreadful than it sounds?

...

Worksafe, you say. Charity, you say.

It's still clowns. Rather creepy people, clowns. Particularly when one now has an ineradicable image of a naked one doing handstands in one's brain.

Oh, my poor brain.

Thank you for braving that clickthrough, so others of us don't have to.

Here, have some brain-bleach.

(Also some tea, and fresh-made scones with home-made blackberry jam. 'Cause tea and scones make a lot of things better.)

Oh, she's not so bad. That space alien in the cape has turned her head, is all.

Home-made blackberry jam? Oh dear me.

That's a powerful palliative, that is. :P

Blackberries picked by me (and my friend Liz, who visits every month or so and self-describes as "Igorina" (yes, we're Pratchett fans)). The great thing about blackberry jam is that the prep is easy - no peeling or chopping. Also great - free berries.

Yes.

I love living somewhere where my walk down to the sea takes me past brambles brimming with blackberries, in autumn. Although this year they're very late ripeners.

(Pratchett fans of the world, unite. :P)

OTOH, being fair, I cannot fault your honesty. It is, indeed, worksafe. Very much so.

I merely find the very thought of naked clowns creepy beyond words.

Hey! My Granny used to be a clown, and I assure you, she is not creepy. She's also not posing naked for any calendars, or any anything elses, either.

Clearly your Granny is the exception that proves the rule.

You understand that about clowns in general, I'm not about to offer a retraction, though. :)

Not to worry; the clowns themselves aren't completely naked. They're all wearing clownface, some of them are wearing bright red rubber noses, and at least one of them is wearing a hat.
